We all need a place to be ourselves, where appearances don't matter and we can indulge in at least a few minutes of peace and quiet, briefly forgetting responsibilities and the "to-do" list. There's a difference between a "house" and a "home". The community council of an exclusive celebrity housing estate on the south coast of England forbids the use of lawn mowers between midday Saturday and nine o'clock on Monday morning. Garden fences and hedges must be a minimum 2.4 metres high. Because accounts at the local supermarket are anonymous, delivery drivers cannot identify the householders whose groceries they carry. Security guards patrol the estate where residents hide from celebrity-spotters and fans. Is this the price of fame and fortune? When does a home become a prison?

By contrast, we remember seeing the turmoil, heartbreak and tragedy last summer as many thousands of people abandoned their homes in search of peace and stability away from Afghanistan and the perceived threat to everything they held dear. We also remember other refugees and migrants who risk everything in search of a new home. We think of their anxiety and fear as, craving homes they can call their own, they face an unknown future in a strange land. What did Jesus mean in speaking of the homelessness that he and his followers knew? Are his followers to downgrade their loved ones in opting for a life of uncertainty? Are we to be afraid of the unknown or confident in following Jesus?

Jesus declared that he had nowhere to call his home. Were there moments when he wanted to escape to a place of his own? Having been ejected from Nazareth, he made Capernaum his base and occasionally visited his friends Martha, Mary and Lazarus in Bethany. He was "at home" but the house wasn't his. Might he have liked occasionally to shut the front door and make the world go away, even for a couple of hours? Apart from his times of solitary prayer, Jesus made himself available to others, known and unknown, at every hour of the day and night. Jesus wanted people to see and know him. He didn't want his disciples to prevent access and didn't gravitate towards people according to their bank balance and high status in society.

Was Jesus, the source of love, unloving when he said that the dead should be left to bury the dead? He appeared to stop someone from saying goodbye to his family before following him. He promised his followers no fixed abode, hard work, tiredness, inconvenience and criticism. If that's love, it's tough. Jesus' words in today's Gospel do not make for easy reading. They are hard-hitting. He was blunt and uncompromising in saying that to follow him requires wholehearted commitment and determination to give until it hurts. Today's Gospel is about putting others before self. That's what it means to lay down one's life on behalf of others.

Most of us have, at one time or another, walked past a huddled sleeping bag in a shop doorway, spread out beneath a bridge or across a park bench, perhaps with a sign asking for money. We might worry that it's money to spend on drink or drugs – but then perhaps the person might use it to find a bed for the night, or to buy a hot drink and a sandwich. We're afraid of being conned by someone's hard luck story that might or might not be true. Yet we should remember that few people are homeless by choice. Some opt for opulent luxury but mistakenly believe that fame and fortune are their own reward. Instead of a home, they create a gilded cage. Others are physically homeless because circumstances force them into a desperate search for the basics of survival for themselves and their families.

Yet others may, in a sense, describe themselves as having no fixed abode simply because they have chosen to accept Jesus' call to follow him. Just as his home was nowhere because it was everywhere, so can the same be said for his followers. They do not occupy a mindless routine that restricts their minds and activities, because their hearts are alive and sensitive to the beauty and intricacy of the people around them. The proverb tells us that "home is where the heart is" – and so they find Jesus everywhere and in everyone. Jesus told us to make our home in him just as he makes his home in my heart, your heart, our hearts. That requires self-sacrifice.
