In 1975 Francis Xavier Nguyễn Văn Thuận, "apostle of hope" as he came to be known and Archbishop of Saigon, was imprisoned by the communist regime in Vietnam. He would remain in prison, often in solitary confinement, for the next fifteen years. Heartbroken to be taken away from his people, the day after his imprisonment he wrote, "My heart is torn to pieces for having been taken away from my people."

Soon after being taken into custody, however, he vowed, "I am not going to wait. I will live each present moment, filling it to the brim with love." Such an attitude of heart enabled him to bring Christ's love to his fellow prisoners and to the prison warders. The love, gentleness and courtesy he showed to his captors led them to have a deep respect for him, though it did not lessen his ill treatment. Francis gave them a vision of what it means to serve God with one's whole heart and soul, of how someone who carries the love and mercy of Christ within can be a light in a very dark place. Pope Francis named him among the "Venerable" in 2017, a step on the path towards canonisation.

Our first reading today does not shy away from the inequalities of our world, from the injustice of poverty, the plight of the orphan or the cry of the widow. It does, however, reassure us that, while the world may be deaf to the cries of those who suffer, God is not and in fact always responds to the prayers of those who are humble and suffering. St Paul in our second reading is looking back over his life's journey. He is putting the struggles he has endured for his faith into perspective. Part of this perspective includes offering forgiveness to those who have not supported him in his mission for Christ. Paul has served the Lord with all his heart, and it is out of this love for Christ that his ability to forgive others and to meet the future with hope is born.

Our Gospel reading offers us the parable of the Pharisee and tax collector. There is a certain righteousness in the attitude of the Pharisee, who judges himself to be the ideal servant of God. His prayer reflects his high regard for himself and his disregard for the "rest of mankind", and especially the tax collector. The tax collector, on the other hand, simply raises his eyes to heaven, acknowledges God's presence and asks for God's mercy. God recognises his humility and his openness of heart sets him at rights with God. In his poverty of heart, he receives the fullness of God's merciful love. He goes home "at rights with God". Once again, we see that God's graciousness is not contingent on a person's status or the observance of the law but on a heart that seeks to serve God with all that it possesses.

We can find many similarities between the world we live in and that of our readings today. In many parts of the world, poverty, hunger and death are a stark reminder of how powerful people treat those who are powerless. Sadly, our world does not put an equal value on every life. Even our own hearts can become hardened to the suffering of those around us and we can find ourselves tempted to a way of thinking that is like that of the Pharisee. We can offer the minimum required to fulfil the law of our Christian faith without touching the core of its meaning.

And yet, at the deepest level of our relationship with Christ, we want our hearts to be open, to be expanded, to envelop the needs of others and to fill the world with God's love. And the good news is that we can. We may not be in prison like St Paul or Archbishop Tuân, but there are other prisons from which we may need to be released. We might find ourselves in the prison of righteous judgement like the Pharisee or in the prison of unforgiveness or ingratitude. The tax collector in his honesty found the forgiveness of God to be more than he had hoped for. The tax collector went home with a heart that knew God's love in its healing fullness and this same gift is ours for the asking. Armed with such loving hearts, we cannot help but be good news for all those we meet.
